Prompt 1:

Corporate Social Responsibility in the Global Food and Drink Industry

Oxfam's "Behind the Brands" scorecard examines the top ten global food and drink companies and assesses their environmental social practices. The rankings are based primarily on public information, such as reports available on the company websites and comments and complaints people post on social networks – known as “shaming and naming.” Between the first and second years of the report, nine of the ten companies improved their scores, including Nestle, Coca-Cola, Pepsi, Mars, and Kellogg's. Nestle, for example, is cited for its focus on climate change and water; Coca-Cola's emphasis is on women's rights. If you were part of a corporate team charged with formulating short- and long-term strategies for responding to Oxfam's scorecard, what would you recommend? How should companies respond to campaigns like Oxfam's that push firms and consumers to consider questions such as transparency, workers' rights, and sustainability in their economic decisions? Why do you think that the responses of companies within the same industry vary so widely?

Prompt 2:

Social or Economic Problem

Identify a social or economic problem facing the world today. Discuss how the effects of the problem are manifested, what solutions could be offered, and what you believe should be done to mitigate the effects of the problem.
